

WINDOVER ARCHEOLOGICAL SITE

Address Restricted, Titusville vicinity

This small, isolated peat deposit contains artifacts and human burials dating to the Early Archaic period, nearly 11,000 B.C. It represents one of the largest collections of human skeletal material from this time period and provided one of the largest collections of fiber arts yet found at any archeological site in the New World. The site, discovered in 1982 in connection with construction activities, also contained a diverse array of bone, antler, and wooden remnants. It is not open to the public.
